Theodore Roosevelt became to-day only 47 years short of a centenarian. Go it, Teddy!

"Vice-President Witters" of the Central Vermont has an almost natural sound already.

John Combs, A. B. (meaning able baseballist), here's to an early recovery that you may enjoy the charms of your Kennebunk farm!

President Taft and President Benton might get up a little joint debate on the merits of the college yell, now that the former has called it "barbaric," while the latter has extolled it.

Congratulations to Concord, N. H.'s granite industry on securing a contract which promises to revive the business there. This turn of events ought to dissipate the gloom which has characterized the recent letters to the trade journal from that granite center.

The Masonic fraternity of St. Johnsbury is planning to join the number of lodges in Vermont which own splendidly equipped homes, and the pictures of the proposed structure indicate that St. Johnsbury will have a handsome addition to its public, or semi-public, buildings. It ought not to be long before the large branch of the same order in Barre is housed in its own structure.

Our Associated Press service enabled The Times to give the result and abbreviated story of the post-season baseball games to its city readers within a few minutes after the close of the games, although the last edition was necessarily somewhat later than the usual time of going to press. Inning by inning the game was clicked over the telegraph wire with great promptness, and the service seems to have been appreciated by our readers, as it gave them the result of the battles, without the necessity of waiting till the next day.

That there is still chance for sentiment in Vermont to crystallize in favor of candidates not the most prominently mentioned for governor of Vermont, is indicated by this chance paragraph, taken from the present week's issue of the Barton Monitor:

"Is Slack going to run? We would like to know up here in Orleans county. We are anxious to take down some votes for him."

Inasmuch as The Monitor is one of the influential papers of northern Vermont, its cry indicates that public sentiment there is still to be formed. The field is still open.

In speaking of the death of the aviator, Eugene Ely, at Macon, Ga., recently, the St. Johnsbury Caledonian recalls that Ely refused to make a flight on one day of the last fair at St. Johnsbury, because he thought the conditions unsafe, and some of the disappointed spectators called him a coward. Hence, the contemporary expresses satisfaction that Ely's determination not to ascend was final and that the scene of his death was not at St. Johnsbury. The sense of satisfaction is natural enough; but what stands out more prominently is the warning for unknowing crowds to let the aviators decide when it is safe to go into the air.

Just a few words about a few good things we supply for men's wear.

PLEAS MADE IN TURLEY CASE

be hard to identify it after corroding had set in because of the fact that there is iron in blood.

Attorney Senter referred to the statement of one witness that Primavera was so nervous when he was down near where the body was found that he attracted public attention. He said that there was no motive for Turley to commit the crime; that the state hadn't produced any evidence to show jealousy as a motive. The motive was robbery, he declared, and in this connection he spoke of the fact that McAuley's hip pocket was found turned inside out.

Reverting to the blood spots, the attorney said they were beside a path which leads to Primavera's back door, and Mr. Senter went on to describe what Primavera did on the morning of the 12th, that he cut bushes and placed them over the blood spots. The fact that McAuley was killed beside the path was a circumstance to be considered. The jury has a right to presume, he said, that McAuley was looking for more beer when he left the Staples' house.

Referring to Turley's appearance, Attorney Senter remarked: "You have seen Turley's appearance here in the court room, you have seen his appearance on the stand, and I leave him with you, gentlemen, with the conscientious belief that a verdict of not guilty will be returned."

A recess was here taken, and on the resumption of the case, Attorney Senter again spoke for a short time, saying that he believed it took two men to carry the body from the place, where McAuley was killed to where it was found. The eyelets and the buttons found in the ashes, also the metal frame of a pocketbook and the clothes, the cherry leaf and the cherry twigs buried in the cellar all tend to show, he said, that someone else besides Turley committed the crime.

State's Attorney Carver.

State's Attorney Carver opened the argument for the state yesterday afternoon. He first spoke of the wounds which McAuley had received and of the result of the autopsy, saying that these wounds showed that a most brutal murder had been committed. He then told the story of McAuley's movements on the evening of July 11, up to the time he met Turley at the Staples' house, telling whom McAuley saw and what happened in his presence that evening.

After that Mr. Carver told of where Turley was, and what he did until he also went to the Staples house. Then, after going over the plan and pointing out to the jury the location of the different houses and where evidences of the crime had been found, he told them that all the members of this whole community had been eliminated from the crime and that suspicion pointed to only two men and that he believed that Alphonse Primavera was as innocent as any one of them. He spoke of the fact that Alphonse was at home lying down on his own piazza when he heard voices and swearing at the Staples house. He argued that from the conflicting stories told by Mrs. Staples, she was trying to cover something up and that also her daughter, Rebecca, was trying to shield someone.

He said that the evidence showed that Primavera had no trouble with anyone that evening and that he was the first one to leave the Staples house; that Primavera would not have gone down near the scene of the crime and almost to the place where the body was found when he went to cut the cherry bushes if he had known anything about it.

He said that Turley's own brother was doing all he could to help the defense in putting a "plant" in Primavera's cellar, which was dug up by him and Mr. Donahue last week; and that no one told Turley where to dig but that he went there and started digging without anyone's telling where to begin. He considered this an evidence of the respondent's guilt. He told the jury that there had been evidence introduced that Primavera acted nervous when he went down where the body was on the morning of the 12th, but there was evidence that everybody was nervous and excited there. Turley did not go down to see the body that morning and no one had a chance to see how he would act. In closing he said that the thing had narrowed itself down to two men and the question was, which one did it?

Hoar for Defence.

Mr. Hoar followed Mr. Carver and began the argument for the defence. He said that the state had been compelled to put Mr. Primavera on the stand because of the fact that the evidence against the respondent was being refuted. He told the jury that Alphonse had testified on the stand to owning a pair of wooden pants but that they had not been seen since the murder had been committed; and then spoke of the witnesses that had testified to smelling cloths burning on the morning of the 12th and again the next day. Said that the fact that eyelets from shoes and overall buttons were found in the ashes back of the Primavera house and pieces of clothing and cherry twigs were found in the cellar of his house show that Alphonse committed the crime.

He argued that the cherry bushes which Alphonse cut on the morning of the 12th and which were later found lying over blood spots at the back of Primavera's house was evidence that he knew about the crime and was trying to cover up the traces of it; that at the time these bushes were cut Turley, as the evidence showed, was in bed and asleep; that Turley had no opportunity whatever to cover up these spots. He went on to say that there was no evidence in the case presented by the state of jealousy as a motive for the crime; that no one had testified to seeing Turley and Rebecca together; nor that Turley had ever told anyone that she was his sweetheart. Mr. Hoar then said that when Alphonse had gone home and laid down on the piazza he lifted up his head and heard voices on the Staples piazza; that it was the jingling of money that he heard and if this was so where was the money? There was only a fifty cent piece and five cent piece found on McAuley's person the next morning.

He said that these blood spots and place where sods were dug up, which were found the morning of the 13th, were beside the path which leads from the highway to the back of Primavera's house; that McAuley was searching for beer that night; that Primavera did not sell beer from the front door, as the testimony of Ed McDonald showed. Mr. Hoar said that the testimony of the Fraser boy showed that McAuley's body was lying by the wayside at a quarter to one and that Turley was at the Staples house at the time, making it impossible for him to commit the crime.
